ADVICE FOLLOWED

There was a fever of excitement. A gospel meeting was going on in Princeton, New Jersey. A first-year student became interested in becoming a Christian. The minister had presented powerful, moving lessons. Others were responding to the invitation nightly. This young man wanted to be sure before obeying Christ, so he went to the college president and said, "Mister

President, I have decided to consider becoming a Christian. What would you do?"

The old president gave this advice. "If I were you, I would wait until the excitement of the revival was over, then think about it very carefully." The young man followed his advice. This young man became famous in American history. His name was Aaron Burr. His family has stated that he died never again expressing a desire to obey the gospel. The advice given him by the college president was exactly what Satan inspired him to give.

This happens every day. Someone states a desire to obey the gospel, and there is always someone saying, "You better think about it awhile. You can do it later." Satan scores again!
